VOL. VIII.

RICHMOND, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1910.

NO. 12.

TRUE WOMAN.

True worth is in being, not seeming—
In doing each day that goes by Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kindly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our me as we measure—
We can not do wrong and feel right,
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure—
For justice avenges each slight.

The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.
—Alice Cary.

The Home-Coming

There had been a thunderstorm, but the lowering black clouds had rumbled suddenly off, and now, out to the west, the sun was setting amid a riotous wealth of crimson and gold.

From the cottage chimneys the thin blue smoke wavered up in misty spirals. The rain had filled the air with a sense of freshness, and the uneven roadway was speckled with puddles which reflected the clear blue of the sky. Talking and laughing, the villagers were lounging about with the easy aimlessness begot of the knowledge that the day's work was over and done with.

Down the straggling village street came a young girl dressed in thin, shoddy clothes. As she threaded her way down the sodden road her bearing was by turns shrinking and bold. It was as if she had made up her mind to some resolve, and intended to carry it out however much her soul might innately rebel at the idea.

As she passed down the street the villagers turned to look after her. Outside the inn, a group of men laughed noisily as she passed, and only laughed the louder at the look of defiant scorn she cast at them.

Two slatternly women, conversing familiarly with each other across the width of the road, stopped their talk abruptly to stare at her as she nervously stepped past them.

"Old Bennett's gal, ain't she?" asked one.

"That's 'er—the 'ussyl' was the answer. 'Come on again, I s'pose.'"

"Run away, didn't she? Went to London, or something?"

"That's it. Went play-actin'—so she wrote to 'er father. Fine play-actin'."

"YOU'RE NO DAUGHTER OF MINE."

"I'll be bound," she laughed sneeringly, significantly.

"What did old Bennett say to that, eh?"

"Said she was no more 's daughter. No more she 'ad call to be, after runnin' away, and disracin' the family like that."

They gazed speculatively after the thin figure in the shabby frock. Then their eyes met and they nodded knowingly at each other.

"Quite the lady!" laughed one shrilly.

Meanwhile, with the women's words ringing in her ears, the girl kept dejectedly on her way. At the gate of a cottage garden she saw one of her father's old cronies—one who had often danced her on his knee in the years that were past.

"Good evening, Mr. Abram," she ventured timidly.

He stared at the sound of her voice, muttered something into his beard and turned to enter his house.

Slowly the girl's eyes filled. Two great tears trembled on the lashes of her blue eyes, overbalanced, and rolled dolorously down her pale cheeks. She took three or four hurried steps, then a few in which hesitation was apparent. Finally, she stood still and glanced back uncertainly. Then a look of determination again came into her face, and she continued on her road.

Old Bennett lived on the Common, and a turn in the road brought the cottage into her view. She drew in her breath in a sharp, hissing sob at sight of it, and her pace grew quicker.

A little knot of people she had once known as friends stood gossiping at the corner of the Common. She walked past them with eyes averted, and no one spoke a word of greeting.

Again the girl wavered. Then through her tears she saw the cottage, and hurried on.

She stepped softly, thief-like, through the gate, and passed along the path, her heart beating wildly.

Footsteps rang out over the stone floor within and a boy opened the door. He stood amazed to see the girl and eyed her affrightedly. Beyond, through the half-open door of an inner room,

RUSSIAN SPIES IN NEW YORK

If a Russian Jew dwelling in a tenement house in New York spends his evenings in a public library reading the history of his fatherland or poring over books on democracy or socialism, the secret police of the Czar of Russia will know about it sooner or later. The name, age, sex, address and occupation of the library reader will, in the course of routine business, be inscribed on the official records at St. Petersburg, together with a description of the listed person's physical appearance.

This curious fact is merely one indication of the thoroughness of the Russian government's spy system in New York, a system which Vladimir Bourtsch, the scholar and historian of the Russian revolutionary movement, has come to the United States to expose.

According to Bourtsch and the leaders of the movement with whom he is working, New York harbors many secret agents of the home government, whose business it is to keep the police informed of the revolutionary activities in America, and especially to cable information whenever a revolution is planned. Bourtsch, who has been the founder, disbanded. Since then he has worked as a "free lance" revolutionist, writing many books and papers, allying himself first with one group and then another to accomplish a certain object, and always trusted and admired by the workers from whose societies he has held himself aloof. He is recognized as the scholar and the historian of the movement.

One of the chief activities of the revolutionists is smuggling their literature into Russia. Much of it is taken across the border by men who live near the line, on the Austrian side, and whose business takes them back and forth frequently. They will conceal a consignment of pamphlets in their carts, under a load of merchandise. Then at a convenient and safe place the books will be unloaded and buried in the ground, to await the arrival of the man charged with the responsibility of distributing them.—Montreal Herald and Star.

her eager, straining eyes caught a glimpse of an old man starting up from his chair in vague alarm. The boy turned without a word and went to the old man.

"Tis Bess," he told him simply. "Bess!" she heard the old man cry joyously, and something clattered to the floor, as if it had been dropped.

"Then—Bess, ye say?" in a harsher tone. He came slowly to the door.

"So, 'tis you?" he said. "You want to come back to us, eh?" She nodded her head humbly.

"And do you think we'll have you?" he went on sternly. "You ran away from your home, remember. We wasn't unkind to you, was we?"

She shook her head, and looked up at him, her lips trembling piteously. "There was nothin' in reason that you wanted that you didn't have. And yet you ran away. You forgot love, Bess; you forgot duty; you forgot them that never forgot you—you forgot everything. You're no daughter of mine!"

"Father!" he cried in supplication. "Aye, and now you've 'ad your fling. Bess, you wants to come back. And how do I know that we can take you back? There's bad in ye, gal. You ran away, never carin' whether your mother's heart was broke or not. You crept away in the dark like a thief. You went away on the stage, as you calls it. I know what London is. It's a cruel place, lass, a terrible cruel place."

He passed his hand wearily across his forehead. "Oh, why did ye do it, Bess?" he asked, his voice breaking helplessly.

He stood looking sadly at her. Then a gleam of hope shot across his face. With sudden force he seized her by the wrist and swung her toward the setting sun.

The lingering rays lighted up the wan cheeks and tear-dimmed eyes of the girl. With fierce, questioning look, the father stood gazing at his daughter.

She met his stare unflinchingly; blue eyes looked into gray without a tremor. His grasp on his wrist was hurting her, but still she looked straight into his eyes.

The seconds seemed drawn into minutes, but still the gray eyes searched the blue, as if they would draw every secret from them.

The old man's expression began to relax. By degrees content crept into the gray eyes. A great spring of yearning love was surging in his heart.

"Father!" she whispered. He drew in his breath with a hiss at the word. His hand fell from her wrist and hung indeterminate at his side.

"Father!" she whispered again. Of a sudden his shoulders squared and he hung wide the door.

"Come in!" he cried, a new note in his voice. He thrust out his hands to her. "Come in. . . my daughter!"—O. Morton Howard in Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW FUELS IN USE.

Our Increasing Employment of Gases and Oils Under Boilers.

During the first half of the last century it was solid fuel only that was employed for the generation of heat and power, but the last half of the century has seen the advent of liquid and gaseous fuels, which under certain conditions proved themselves of the greatest value. The Scientific American says.

Certain processes are now largely dependent upon their use, this being due to the ease of application which has meant economy in labor and greatest facility for converting the heat into work. As an example of the ease of application making a fuel of poor calorific value more effective in use than coal of high quality as those of glass, where in the heating by solid fuel the necessary temperature had to be imparted to the mass of raw material through the walls of a thick fire clay retort, the difficulty of application here being dependent upon the fact that the crucible had to be heated to a very high temperature to get the necessary fusing point of the glass mixture, and that maintaining this for a considerable period meant a big expenditure in fuel and great wear and tear to the furnace and containing vessel.

It was clear that if the fuel could be gasified and the clean flame made to play directly on to the surface of the mixture to be fused, instead of having to impart the heat through the walls of the containing vessel, an enormous economy would be obtained, and this is now done by the utilization of producer gas and regeneration in the continuous tank process. In the same way liquid fuel, as soon as methods could be found for its proper combustion, presented such wonderful economies and advantages for marine work that, in spite of its being dearer than coal, it at once found a place in both the navy and merchant marine. The possibility of being able to store it below the level of the boiler in the ballast tanks instead of having, as in coal bunkers, to have the storage above that level, at once gave increased space in the important part of the vessel, and what was of much greater importance in the service, the being able to carry a larger supply of latent energy in the same space as the coal occupied increased the radius of action of the vessel.

Dogs for in England. The London Chamber of Commerce, through its fur and skin trade section, has issued a warning to furriers, drapers and others throughout the "United Kingdom" in regard to common "misdescriptions" of furs. Daily Commercial and Trade Reports says.

The following is a list of the most common misdescriptions included in the list:

"Real Russian sable"—American sable.

"Sable"—fitch, dyed.

"Bear"—goat, dyed.

"Fox"—hare, dyed.

"Lamb or broadtail"—kidd.

"Mink, sable or skunk"—marmoset, dyed.

"Sable"—mink, dyed.

"Mink or sable"—musquash, dyed.

"Seal, electric seal, Red river seal, and Hudson seal"—musquash, pulled and dyed, or nutria, pulled and dyed, or rabbit, sheared and dyed.

"Beaver and otter"—nutria, pulled, natural.

"Beaver"—opossum, sheared and dyed.

"Seal"—otter, pulled and dyed.

"Sable or French sable"—rabbit, dyed.

"Ermine"—rabbit, white.

"Chinchilla"—rabbit, white, dyed.

"Skunk"—wallaby, dyed.

"Fox"—white hare.

In addition, white hairs are inserted in foxes and sables to make "silver foxes."

Entitled to It. "How are things lookin' over to Dingledeil?"

"They've been lookin' purty squamish for a spell. Th' creek got so blame high it overflowed Nagsley's dam, an' there's two foot o' water in Widder Brown's cellar."

"Well, well, I s'pose you folks over there will be so stuck up pretty soon that you'll be callin' yourselves th' Parisians of Ameriky!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

European Universities. At least two of the provincial universities of France rank with the first universities of Germany, and the one great Catholic university of Belgium, that of Louvain, is of about the same rank. The Italian University of Turin stands above Freiburg in numbers.

DECEMBER AND MAY.

Mating of the Old and the Young.

Now Becomes the Fashion.

What does it matter how old a man is or what the age of a woman is if they wish to marry? What have years to do with love and that felicity that comes from the tying of the nuptial knot? Dr. Johnson's wife was more than twenty years his senior, and Shakespeare's spouse was old enough to be his mother. They were happy, and why should not those who follow their example in these days also find connubial joys?

It is getting to be the fashion nowadays, this mating of December and May, the New York Telegraph says. Recently a wealthy woman of Hartford made plans for marrying a school-boy at New Haven. She was about 70 and he about 20, and her children and grandchildren, when they learned about it, went to the courts and said she was crazy. But the judges knew otherwise, and set her free and let her continue mistress of her own fortune.

Then there was the lady of a noted American family who lived in her mansion on the Hudson. For 63 years she had lived alone, and then she married her hostler, aged 24. What of that? Shall a woman who has lived nearly threescore years and ten and still is an old maid continue so until her death?

Mme. Francoise Mantelato, 57 years old, and Arthur Springer, 23 years old, have taken out a license to marry in this city. Speaking for the lady and himself, Master Springer made this statement: "It is no one's business except ours if we marry." The boy is right; he can marry his step-grandmother if he wishes, and not even the law can say him nay.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

Why We Cough, Sneeze and Sigh. One of the most interesting facts about the human body is its power of self-preservation—its power of evading or overcoming the thousand and one conditions which, unless corrected, would be injurious or destructive.

Among the most common of these acts of self-preservation are the cough, the sneeze and the sigh. Every one is familiar with these acts; yet few people ever ask themselves the cause, and fewer still could explain them.

One of the simplest of the body's devices for self-protection is the cough. The cough is merely a blast of air propelled from the lungs in such a manner as to forcibly dislodge some foreign substance which has been drawn into the throat, the windpipe or the tubes leading to the lungs. The membranes lining these parts of the body are very sensitive, and when a foreign matter comes in contact with them, an alarm message is sent to the nervous "headquarters," and the result is the sudden, spasmodic expulsion of breath which is called a cough.

Very often the cough is accompanied by the irritation of the accumulation of mucus on the surface mentioned. In this case, as in the case of a foreign body, the cough is merely a means of expelling the matter.

So, you see, a cough is merely one of nature's methods of self-protection. The ordinary cough cure contains some drug which, by paralyzing the nerves, prevents the cough and allows the mucus to accumulate. Thus the cough medicine does only harm. The cure for cough is to cough—to cough until the excessive deposit is removed.

Meantime, of course, measures should be taken to prevent undue deposits. A sneeze is exactly like a cough, save that the obstruction occurs in the nostrils, owing to the deposit of some irritant or foreign matter, and that the blast of air is thrown out through the nose instead of through the throat and mouth.

Why do we sigh? When grieved or depressed, the tendency is to hold the breath. This means that the body suffers for oxygen; and the long, deep breath which we call a sigh is merely a means by which the body obtains for itself the necessary amount of oxygen.—Dr. W. R. C. Latson, in Health Culture.

Her One Anxiety. Thrown from her luxurious motor car, the fair girl had lain insensible for many hours. Now, however, the operation was over, consciousness had returned and she spoke faintly in the darkened room.

"Yvonne?"

"Yes, mademoiselle." The maid bent over her.

"Yvonne, tell me Did I, or did I not, have on my new silk stockings?"—Judge.

Bliss for Her. Miss Sweet-Poor-fellie's in trouble. She's had proposals from two men and she doesn't know which to accept.

Miss Elder—Goodness mercy! You don't call that trouble.—Boston Transcript.

Pair Office Exchange. Stenog—Oh, Frank, will you please sharpen my pencil?

Clerk—Yes, if you'll please sew on this button.—Boston Herald.

MACDONALD AVENUE DEPOTS AS FOLLOWS:

Southern Pacific

The subway, at the main Richmond depot on Macdonald Avenue, at a cost of $55,000, a permanent mechanism, built in 1909, fixes for all time the central commercial traffic way.

The next improvement will be a modern, enlarged mission style depot for the AVENUE and a local electricized road, an extension north from Berkeley to the depot, looping the loop via West Berkeley to San Francisco, with a 20-cent fare.

Southern Pacific is building track for electric service to Macdonald Avenue depot.

Santa Fe

This road came to Richmond in 1900, before the Standard Oil refinery, extending for wharves at Ferry Point, tunnel, viaducts, depots, round-house, shops, library, warehouses and Terminal tracks about $1,700,000. Like the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe's main depot is on Macdonald Avenue and it, will be of the mission style when moved near First Street, and enlarged.

The Oakland and East Side Railway, the northern terminus of the coast division, is here and will use gasoline motors to connect for San Francisco through the Key Route.

All trains of the O. & E. S. Ry. stop at Sixth and Ohio for transfer to Richmond, add 3 minutes to schedule of Macdonald Avenue depot and for stops from Oakland subtract 3 minutes.

At Sixth Street Station all trains to and from Richmond and Oakland stop on flag.

The Santa Fe motor cars between Richmond and Oakland are a complete success. Passengers are carried speedily between regular train service. Richmond is the main station and regular stops are made at Richmond Avenue, Sixth Street, and Wall Street near Pullman shops.

EAST SHORE & SUBURBAN RY
—Electric cars. Local service—
This is the best city electric railway system in the world in a city nine years old. Fare from County Line to Macdonald Ave. and Twentieth at Richmond, only 5c. to Point Richmond, 10c. This building, under the Avenue. Electric cars also stop at the Vard. Ten-minute car service is in force from Twentieth Third street on the Ave. to Washington Ave., 12 Richmond.

RICHMOND BELT RAILWAY
The Belt Line connects Richmond with the commerce of the world through the oceanic and inland shipping with Richmond as a distributing center—via great overland railroads, the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, which, by traffic arrangements, control the Belt and its wharves, each assuming separate management every alternate year. The largest vessels, almost discharge and take on cargo and meet the Terminal overland railroads, here at deeper water than at San Francisco. The Belt Line also carries factory, warehouse, wharf and other employees, twice daily, via East Shore & Suburban electric cars to and from their homes in Richmond.

Mr. G. S. Wall,
San Francisco,
Dear Sir:—Confirming my reply to your telegram of even date. I beg to say that we that we expect to begin work on our Richmond plant between the first and fifteenth of April.

As you can probably appreciate, it is no small matter to make the plans for a shop of this kind and necessarily the plan is discussed and changes made by our engineers and shop managers. We are going ahead with this just as fast as is consistent with good business practice. As soon as the details are complete it will not take long to complete the work.—Yours very truly,

MESSINGER BOYS AS NURSES.

Trained in London to Mind Babies

While Mothers Attend a Tea.

"They do things differently in Paris," they say, and Paris is not so far from London. When it comes to messenger boys they do things very differently, indeed, there, the Los Angeles Examiner says.

The word messenger boy in the United States calls up at once the vision of a rakish little chap with dragging feet, a copy of "The Terror of the Gulch" or "Horrid Henry's" Gory Revenge" in his hand or sticking out of his pocket. A creature of curious ways, pert and impudent at times, who has been a staple of the alleged funny papers for years.

Not for a dozen worlds would the American mother, minus for the time a nurse, call in a messenger boy to perform that lady's functions while she went shopping. Do you think she would? Well, hardly.

But over in London taking care of babies is down on the messenger's curriculum as one of his traits. And he knows how. He has to.

Does mamma wish to go out for afternoon tea or to do a little purchasing? She walks to the telephone booth.

"Oh, will you please send me a nice, capable messenger boy? Yes, I want him to take care of baby while I am gone. Please send me a real motherly sort of one. The last one was not at all careful about the temperature of the milk. Yes, that's all, thanks.

Good-by.

Right afterward comes the messenger. He doesn't look like the American variety. He has an official air and an atmosphere of solidity that could never grow in the climate of the States.

"Erre him, lady," he says. "Many special instructions and 'ow often do you feed him?"

Instructions are given and mamma salutes forth with an easy mind.

The messenger rocks the cradle, he even sings. If he has been told, he takes the baby out for a walk, rushing the perambulator with all the dignity of a father. He knows just what temperature the milk should be and he feeds the nursing at the right time.

"We may not be such delightful husbands," once said a very serious Englishman, "but as fathers we are behind reproach.

This is perhaps the same feeling, racial and deep grained, that has led to the development of the maternal faculties of the messenger boy. When he grows up he may beat his wife, but he will always be kind to his offspring.

But only fancy an American matron calling up a messenger station and asking for a boy to take care of little

Charles or Harry. Probably, like the Indiscreet parson, who left his parrot with the hostler, she would return to find the baby equipped with a liberal education.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

Effect of the Motto Janet Hung Up

For Herself Alone.

The day after she became one of the stenographers at Wilkins & Arnold's,

Janet Weatherby pinned up a little card in the front of her desk. It was rather a custom among Wilkins & Arnell's stenographers to pin something up in their desks. Estelle Morey had the photograph of a popular actress in hers; Emma Frailey had a fancy head; Bess Jameson, a row of postals, most of them supposed to be comic.

Janet's card contained merely a familiar quotation from Emerson:

"If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, the world will make a beaten path to his door."

Estelle, strolling across to read it, began to laugh.

"Nothing nifty about that!" she remarked.

"Which are you planning to be,"

Bess asked, reading it over Estelle's shoulder, "an author or a preacher?"

"You couldn't get W. & A. to try your new mouse-trap if you invented it," Emma contributed. "They're fifty years behind the times, and always will be."

"Let us know when the world begins to come your way," a fourth cynical voice remarked. It will be interesting to each. Maybe you'd give us reserved seats."

"Certainly I will," Janet retorted, good naturedly. Her color had risen a little under the teasing, but she did not take down her motto.

One morning Billy stopped at her desk. Billy was the office boy, and they two were often the first ones

there, Billy by urgent request, Janet by free will.

"Say," he demanded, "do you believe that?"

"Certainly not," Janet answered, promptly.

"Aw, I don't. Ain't any chance for a feller just opening doors."

"I don't know why not. I'd open doors so that people would like to have me do it for them. I'd do it so that

W. & A. would think you the best office boy they ever had."

"Guess you'd like to try it a while,"

Billy grinned.

Janet picked up a letter she had just completed.

"Isn't that a pretty piece of work?"

she asked. "There isn't a correction, not even a comma; and look at that margin!"

"Nobody'll know the diff," Billy declared.

"I shall know the difference. Whom do you suppose I'm doing this for?"

"F. & A.?" No, sir. First of all, I'm doing it for Janet Weatherby, and she's a mighty exacting chief."

"Aw, stuff!" said Billy.

A month later Janet received a promotion. It was Mr. Arnold who explained it. There was a pleasant twinkle in his eyes.
